it be the inability to supply demands of customers. Competition forces proper consideration of patrons and impels business men to supply the public wants if trade is expected to be held. Increase of patronage is one of the results of competition and every vocation or line of business which will invite new citizens even tho they should be competitors, should be studiously maintained. We will grow solidly if we will encourage increase of population and men with capital or without it. Discourage competition and you injure yourself as well as the city and all who dwell therein any longer than it takes to cut loose and get out.

Touring, in extra good shape. Can be seen at Spot Cash garage, 21 Tom Ball

It is a pleasing sight to see the big stack of wool, graded and ready for bidders, across the street from this office. There is about 130,000 pounds in this lot in the pool.

Jim Fuller of Moberly was here Wednesday.

Of course, as we progress, the town will fill up. There will be some attraction for capital and business men when facilities for doing business are increased; when there is in evidence disposition to have business and trade is invited instead of discouraged. Inevitably, with increase of attractions, there will be increase in competition. Want of competition has done more to discourage patronage of practically all our institutions than any other one thing unless

MONTGOMERY Garage, Brunswick Mo. BROADWAY Garage, Salisbury, Mo.

It is not only the general impression that Democrats can win with either of three candidates who will be before the convention at Frisco this week but it is a conviction among all that neither President Wilson or McAdoo or Palmer should be nominated and hope for victory in November be entertained. It is also generally a conviction among Democrats that unless a straightforward, concise, explicit stand is taken by the convention in its platform on the subjects of prohibition, league of nations and labor questions, there is no cinch for the nominee for president no matter who may be named. A positive stand against the Volstead law concerning which women delegates seem to have changed their opinions; unqualified opposition to becoming a member of the league of nations unless with such reservations as will in no wise surrender to foreigners the right to interfere in any way with our affairs and above all, to guard against the necessity for raising a big army and sending it over seas to be commended by foreign officers unless American interests demand it and again to recognize the rights of labor in such a way as to guaranty the right of collective bargaining and rules by which labor may enforce its just demands.

The Volstead law denies the right to anyone to make wine, cider or beer which will develop more than one half of one per cent alcohol. This cuts out grape, blackberry, elder berry, currant and all other sorts of wine; cuts out apple, pear, crab-apple, all kinds of cider making; cuts out cordials which contain any juice which will ferment and create more than one-half per cent alcohol; prohibits making beer, near beer, ale, porter, 'alf and 'alf or any other 'stuff' which has or will develop more than one half per cent alcohol.

No Democrats and mighty for Republicans, no matter what church they claim kin with, whom death stares not in the face, or who are not candidates for congress under the impression that the country including women, is dry, will for a moment tolerate in a Democratic platform a plank impregnated in the least with endorsement of Volstead or his extra-uterine conception. Volstead being a thing of the past, let the Democratic platform declare that his works depart with him.

Its up to us now. The start has been made, the town looks some different from its appearance a week ago, people seem to be feeling like getting a move. If the work of improvement should stop with the clearing away of the street railway track, it would be an outrage on the owners of the line. Waterworks is the next move after getting the street in shape promised when the obstructions were out of the way. But to those who take an interest to the extent of commenting instead of helping, we will suggest that they be patient and let those who really have the interest of the community at heart work out one thing at a time. To those who face criticism and back-pulls we would say, stay with it, when the benefits are discernable to the eyes always filled with gloomy pictures, your day of commendation will be celebrated by all and your happiness wipe out remembrance of unworthy opposition.
